Conference Goal
Patients with mental health and substance use disorders utilize various specialized resources and make intensive use of health care services. Institutions may not offer specific services for managing patients with co-occurring disorders. The fields of substance abuse treatment and psychiatry have traditionally been profoundly isolated from each other. Yet practice guidelines have indicated that co-occurring disorders are better dealt with using an integrated approach that services being offered concurrently.

This conference will bring mental health and addiction professionals together to examine and discuss the need for the mental health community to integrate services for patients with both addiction and mental illness. As a result, learners will have a better understanding of the clinical needs of the patients with co-occurring disorders that they are working with and the conceptualization of the role of members of the health care team and the skills required to treat patients with dual diagnosis. The discussions will be presented in a trauma informed care and cultural competence frame work.

Conference Objectives
Upon completion of this activity the learner will be better able to:

1. Recognize the benefits and detriments of integrating mental illness and addiction services.
2. Assess practices providing care to patients receiving services in a predominately addiction’s setting so to identify factors that enhance or impede service integration.
3. Assess practices providing care to patients receiving services in a predominately mental health setting so to identify factors that enhance or impede service integration.
4. Analyze treatment connections that bridge mental illness and addiction.

Faculty

Manuel Guantez, PsyD, LCADC, is the Vice President of Outpatient and Addiction Services at Rutgers University Behavioral Health Care. Prior to coming to UBHC, he served as Chief Executive Officer at Turning Point. Dr. Guantez is an international speaker and consultant working with the United Nations to help other countries achieve the gains in combating addiction that we have seen here in the United States. He has been singled out as an important contributor in shaping statewide policy and practices in mental health and substance abuse, and has served on the New Jersey Division of Addiction Services’ Residential Licensure Standards Revision Committee, the Residential Treatment Services Committee, and the Quality Standards Substance Abuse Treatment Committee.

Petros Levounis, MD, MA, is Chair of the Department of Psychiatry at Rutgers New Jersey Medical School and Chief of Services at University Hospital in New Jersey. Dr. Levounis has published nine books on mental health and addiction topics, and is currently working on the American Psychiatric Association’s DSM-5 “Pocket Guide to Addiction Assessment and Treatment”.

Betty Vreeland, APN.C., PMHCNS/APN.BC is an Advanced Practice Nurse at Rutgers University Behavioral Health Care. She has over 30 years of nursing experience working in a variety of behavioral health settings. She divides her time between clinical practice, training, and clinical research/quality improvement initiatives. She has published over a dozen articles and book chapters, and co-authored two manualized psychoeducational wellness programs designed for people with mental illness. Ms. Vreeland has presented at hundreds of state-wide and national conferences, and provided training and consultation to hundreds of behavioral health care organizations on how to implement new paradigms of care, how to integrate physical health care into behavioral health settings, and most recently co-developed UBHC’s Motivational Interviewing (MI) training curriculum.

Erin A. Zerbo, MD, is an Assistant professor in the Department of Psychiatry at Rutgers New Jersey Medical School, and the Associate Director of Medical Student Education in Psychiatry. She currently works on the inpatient psychiatry unit at University Hospital. Dr. Zerbo’s primary interest has always been the treatment of addiction in the context of public psychiatry. She is especially interested in the pharmacotherapy of substance use disorders among the underserved populations and in addressing systemic barriers to integrated and continuous care. She has published a variety of chapters and peer-reviewed journal articles on the subject of addiction, and has frequently lectured on addiction and co-occurring psychiatric disorders.
